## 2. HISTORY

### Founding and Early Years (1887-1920)

Power's University was founded by industrialist and philanthropist Jonathan Power in 1887. Having made his fortune in steel manufacturing, Power believed that the future of America relied on technological innovation and scientific education. The university began with just three buildings and 157 students, focusing primarily on engineering and applied sciences.

### Growth and Expansion (1920-1960)

Under the leadership of President Eleanor Thornton (1920-1945), the university expanded its academic offerings to include liberal arts, business, and medicine. During World War II, Power's University played a significant role in military research, developing technologies that contributed to the Allied victory. The post-war years saw rapid expansion of both facilities and enrollment.

### Modern Era (1960-Present)

The civil rights era brought significant changes to campus culture, with Power's University becoming one of the first prestigious universities to actively recruit students from diverse backgrounds. In 1972, the university established the Power Institute for Social Innovation, cementing its commitment to applying academic knowledge to social challenges. The last three decades have seen tremendous growth in research funding, international partnerships, and technological infrastructure, positioning Power's University as a global leader in higher education.
